Deerfield. Nov. 10. 1880.

My dear Mary.

Your favor of Nov. 3. was duly received. I am much obliged to you for interesting yourself in this literary curiosity, — which, however, is too good to be called a curiosity alone. I am amazed that Mr. Bartlett should not know of the book, nor even have a clew to them. I'll tell you who I think knows them, — that is, Frank B. Sanborn. My acquaintance with him is too slight to enable me to address him, however. Perhaps Wendell Phillips does. I shall probably see Wendell next week, when I'll try to remember and ask him. I think if I had put my request into the Advertiser, or Transcript, or into the Evening Post of New-York, we should have had an abundance of answers.

Yours.

E. Dickinson.

P.S. I rejoice with you over the result of the Election. Garfield, one of his personal friends tells me, is a "very lovable man". There is enough romance about his life, to warrant the highest expectations, which, however, Wm H. Burnum may in vain endeavor, toward the reversal of the vote in New-York I do not mind: and I suppose that brand and Conkling will make herculean and desperate efforts to capture and subjugate the new administration. I can only hope for better things.
